Women are accused of being in their artiess way the most unscrupulous of smugglers; but here as in many other dark transactions, men overmatch them A clerk in a prominent shipping house has for years imported his clothes from London, yet has never paid duty and London, yet has never paid duty and never smuggled them in. At least he has never smuggled them in the usual way adopted by those who don't see the point of paying Uncle Samuel for the privilege of wearing English clothing. His plan is a simple one, but it is not likely to be followed by many imitators. He has a friend on the other side who is a tailor, and he mails as a sample of cloth one leg of a pair of trousers, half of a waistcoat, the sleeve of a coat or This uncomfortable disease is the direct half the back, and the parcel is marked 'sample," and comes wrapped in thick brown paper left open at one end. Some times it takes a month or six weeks for a full suit to arrive, part coming via New York and occasionally a part via Boston. The parts are then sewed toplete. Only once in six years has a parcel been lost in transit, and it was half the back of a coat made of a peculiar shade of blue cloth which the English clerk could not match.
